

YOUR KINDLE NOTES FOR:

JFK and the Unspeakable Secret: Part Two

Michele Metta

Last accessed on Sunday, March 24, 2024

66 Highlights | 0 Notes

Yellow highlight | Location: 174

Even more revealing, however, is one of Truman's candid letters, which he regularly wrote to his wife Bess. In this message, dated September 15, 1946, he described the Jews as "crackpots", eccentric individuals who were prepared to support either Stalin or the Republican Party in order to establish their own country in Palestine. 8

Unfortunately, there is some truth in this rude statement. At that time there was a positive relationship between Joseph Stalin and the Jews in Palestine. Although Stalin was an anti-Semite, he saw the creation of Israel as an opportunity to increase his own power in the Middle East. However, this alliance with the leader of the USSR would later shift in favour of the US due to the manipulative actions of another anti-Semite, US spy James Angleton. The danger of this partnership is evident in the words of George Kennan, the Director of the Policy Planning Staff, who expressed his concerns in a top secret document to the US Secretary of State on January 19, 1948: 9 The USSR stands to gain by the partition plan if it should be implemented by force because of the opportunity thus afforded to the Russians to assist in "maintaining order" in Palestine. If Soviet forces should be introduced into Palestine for the purpose of implementing partition, Communist agents would have an excellent base from which to extend their subversive activities, to disseminate propaganda, and to attempt to replace the present Arab governments by "democratic peoples' governments". The presence of Soviet forces in Palestine would constitute an outflanking of our positions in Greece, Turkey and Iran, and a potential threat to the stability of the entire Eastern Mediterranean area. During an interview on June 14, 1973, Loy W. Henderson, 10 who worked closely with Truman, stated that by the end of November 1947, he was still uncertain whether even at that late date the President had definitively decided to fully support the creation of a Jewish state. This implies that when Harry Truman previously instructed his representative to the United Nations, Hershel Johnson, to endorse the partition plan of Palestine and establish Israel more than a month earlier, it was a decision that Truman had imposed on himself. Therefore, the same can be applied to Truman's recognition of Israel on May 14th, 1948. President Truman's hostility towards the creation of Israel is understandable. The United States relied heavily on foreign oil, much of which came from Arab countries. Recognising a Jewish nation in the Middle East could have potentially jeopardised this supply of oil, therefore threatening the US interests in the region. However, there was a second factor at play. Truman knew that the CIA had hired former high-ranking members of Hitler's Third Reich. It is reasonable to assume that Truman believed Israel might oppose this questionable strategy employed by US intelligence. Unfortunately, Truman was wrong. James Angleton persuaded the Israeli government...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 209

In more recent years, a declassified FBI document, revealed in April 2020, showed that Benjamin Netanyahu, the then Prime Minister of Israel, conspired to manipulate the outcome of the 2016 US presidential elections in favour of Donald Trump. ¹¹ The document also implicates in the scheme two US individuals, Jerome R. Corsi and Roger Stone. They are both authors of widely published books on the assassination of JFK. Interestingly, none of their writings mention any involvement of the Israeli government in that murder. This raises questions. Who, more than Corsi and Stone, should know the inclination of the Israeli government toward this type of activity? Based on this premise, it is important to note that the JFK Records Act required the complete release by October 26, 2017, of all documents related to the assassination of JFK. However, just one day before this deadline, President Trump issued a memo instructing the National Archives to delay the release of certain records for six months. Additionally, in April 2018, Donald Trump issued a second memo that extended this delay for another three and a half years. In light of the above FBI document about Trump's involvement with Israel in a conspiracy to alter the outcome of the 2016 US presidential elections in his own favour, this raises the suspicion that the true intent of Trump's memos was to conceal Israel's involvement also in the Dallas ambush. It should also be noted that President Joe Biden issued a similar memo on October 22, 2021, after he replaced Donald Trump. In this memo, the release of a significant number of documents related to the assassination of John Kennedy was again postponed. This is not the only similarity between Biden and Trump. To avoid religious tensions, all of Trump's predecessors had consistently opted not to recognise Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Trump, however, decided otherwise, and Joe Biden not reversed Trump's highly controversial decision. This is in line with what Biden said in 2013: "If there were not an Israel, we would have to invent one to ensure our interests were protected." ¹² Actually, Joe Biden's admiration for Israel can be traced back at least 30 years to this statement. In 1986, he claimed the following in a speech before the Senate: ¹³

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 239

Additional evidence of a conflict of interest in Joe Biden's memo about the release of documents on the assassination of JFK stems from his actions in 1977. At that time, Biden successfully opposed the appointment of Ted Sorensen as head of the CIA. Sorensen, who had served as one of President Kennedy's top advisors, would have used this position to thoroughly investigate any misconduct within the espionage agency and reveal the truth behind the killing of his friend. Biden stole Sorensen that opportunity. It is not surprising that in his autobiographical book Counselor, Sorensen...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 266

As we shall soon discover, the reason why that visit still occurred is connected to the topic of this book. And related to the subject of this book is also the reason behind Israel's close relationship and military alliance with the Chilean Nazi dictator Augusto Pinochet Ugarte, to whom they sold a significant number of weapons. Aaron Klieman, a Jewish historian, effectively explained this rationale in one of his essays. Israel considers arms sales to be vital for foreign relations, regardless of the political leanings of the countries receiving Israeli assistance. Such sales are seen as a necessary sacrifice in terms of moral currency that Israel, being a small state, must make for national security.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 279

Unfortunately, this complete absence of morals and ethics still exists. A major scandal broke in the summer of 2021. Pegasus, a special software, was used in targeted attacks on heads of state, employees of non-governmental organisations, activists, journalists and political dissidents in various countries. Amnesty International has rightly described these attacks as comprehensive human rights violations. The inventor of Pegasus is the NSO Group, an Israeli technology company based near Tel Aviv. In Israel, Pegasus is considered a weapon, and it is. This software can be installed undetected. In this way, it gains unauthorised access to photos and emails and can activate cameras and microphones without the user's knowledge. These attacks are truly devastating. Pegasus incessantly collects Wi-Fi passwords, location data and all communications from target phones. This includes messages sent via almost all end-to-end encrypted messaging apps such as Messages, Signal, Viber, Facebook Messenger, WhatsApp, Telegram and Skype. Victims are unaware that their devices have been compromised. Pegasus infiltrates their phones without any interaction or visible signs of compromise. 17 NSO is a private company. However, it employs former Israeli cyber espionage officials. In addition, NSO is affiliated with both the Israeli Ministry of Defence and the Defence Export Controls Agency (DECA), which is a government department of the same ministry. DECA regulates NSO like a weapon and issues individual export licences before its surveillance technology can be sold to new countries. The Israeli government has authorised the sale of Pegasus software to repressive regimes such as Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Azerbaijan and Hungary. These regimes use Pegasus to repress their opponents. All countries known to misuse this technology have recently improved their trade or diplomatic relations with Israel. NSO products are not sold to countries that are considered enemies of Israel. 18 Former and current US intelligence officials had suggested that Israel's intelligence agencies have special privileges with the NSO, such as hidden backdoor access to Pegasus surveillance material collected around the world. 19 The existence of such a backdoor was confirmed by Gerard Araud. He is a retired diplomat who served as the French ambassador to Washington, DC. Araud has openly stated to the press that the NSO group cooperates with both the Mossad and the Central Intelligence Agency. He revealed that three US citizens with ties to the CIA were on the advisory board of the group. His allegations carry a great weight. Araud is a direct witness. He was an NSO consultant for several years. 20 It is clear from Araud's words that the hidden actors behind the NSO and the CMC are the same: the Mossad and the Central Intelligence Agency. However, we can add that both the NSO and the CMC were created to get rid of those around the world who are considered too dangerous enemies of the...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 311

Sure, Ram Ben-Barak, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee of the Israeli parliament, appointed a commission of enquiry in 2021 to investigate Pegasus. 22 The paradoxical and problematic thing about this is that Ram Ben-Barak is also a former deputy director of the Mossad.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 342

The idea of a Mossad responsibility for the assassination of JFK emerged soon after his death. As early as November 29, 1963, an unidentified National Security Agency person pointed out that the Syrian newspaper Al Thawra claimed that Israel was behind the Dallas ambush. The author emphasised that the Syrian government was the source of this allegation. However, instead of conducting a thorough investigation as deserved, the news was quickly dismissed as anti-Zionist. 24 This decision was unreasonable, considering that the document was classified as TOP-SECRET DINAR. James Bamford explained in his book The Puzzle Palace that DINAR was a code word for the most sensitive information in the 1960s. Bamford is an excellent source. The New York Times called him "the nation's premier journalist on the subject of the National Security Agency," while The New Yorker defined this author "the NSA's chief chronicler." 25 It is, therefore, utter nonsense to set the DINAR code on this document and, at the same time, dismiss its claims as unfounded. The DINAR code goes back to another, earlier NSA document. It was published on November 25, 1963, just three days after JFK's death and reported on the statements of a Palestinian. This source also claimed that the Israeli government was indeed behind the assassination of JFK. 26 But, like the other document, this second one was immediately dismissed. Another paradigmatic and dramatic so-called non sequitur; another illogic action, inconsistent with its premise.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 372

Sturgis was also behind the CIA-fabricated story that Fidel Castro would kill the child the Cuban leader had with Marita Lorenz, an attractive young German woman who had fallen in love with him after visiting Castro in Havana. The bearer of this false information was Sturgis himself. The girl was deeply affected by what she believed to be a real threat to the life of her baby. At that point, it was really easy for Sturgis to convince the frightened Marita to flee Cuba with the help of the US embassy. Later, in Miami, Sturgis even managed to recruit her for the Central Intelligence Agency. 27 Years later, Ms. Lorenz met in New York City with Gaeton Fonzi, a key member of the House Select Committee on Assassinations, the panel that re-investigated the assassination of President Kennedy under House Resolution 222 in the second half of the 1970s. As Fonzi recounts in his book The Last Investigation, it was Marita Lorenz who decided to contact him and soon thereafter provided him with detailed information about the assassination. As Fonzi pointed out, this information was supported by documents and incriminated Sturgis in the planning and execution of the Dallas ambush along with another notorious CIA spy, E. Howard Hunt. Ms. Lorenz repeated her accusations in 1985 during a defamation trial against E. Howard. Marita Lorenz did not hesitate to put Sturgis, Hunt and Jack Ruby under oath in a CIA "safe house" in Dallas the night before the assassination. The jury believed her and decided against Hunt. 28

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 395

Apart from that, the point is that Frank Sturgis had connections to the Mossad. The first indication of these connections can be found in an article by journalist Paul Meskil published on April 21, 1975 in the New York Daily News under the title Our Havana Triple Spy Helped and Hurt Castro and simultaneously, identical, in the Miami Herald, although under the title I Plotted Castro's Death. It said the following: Frank [Sturgis] became a Haganah courier —perhaps the only Roman Catholic in this group. What Meskil is emphasising with these words is that Sturgis was considered so useful and trustworthy by the Jews that the main Zionist paramilitary organisation hired him even though he was not a Hebrew. Paul Meskil was the same journalist who uncovered the story of Sturgis' involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy by writing the September 20, 1977 article based on the revelations of Marita Lorenz and titled Ex-Spy Says She Drove to Dallas with Oswald & Kennedy 'Assassin Squad'. The Haganah was nefariously famous for its devastating acts of sabotage against the British authorities when Britain, then administering Palestine, was opposed to the creation of Israel. Argosy, a magazine that no longer exists, published in July 1975, Killing the Kennedys: The Case for Conspiracy?, an article by F. Peter Model, a 25-year-old journalist at the time. In it, Model wrote that Sturgis was a Haganah mercenary in 1948. Model also stated that Sturgis had soon afterward made himself a strict collaborator of a female Israeli intelligence agent.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 443

We cannot fail to mention that the chairman of this Senate Foreign Relations Committee was William Fulbright, one of John Kennedy's closest friends. The extent of the agreement between the ideas of JFK and Fulbright on the Middle East is demonstrated, among other things, by a wiretap transcript leaked to the FBI by the National Security Agency. This document shows that when Arabs protested in August 1960 against some statements that John Kennedy had made during his presidential candidacy at the Zionist Congress, JFK chose Fulbright to secretly contact them. After his apology, he clarified that John Kennedy's speech had only been "dictated by political expediency" and "was not an expression of what could be considered [the] policy of [the] Democratic administration with Kennedy as President." 33 Fulbright and JFK also shared a deep fear that Israel was secretly on the verge of developing nuclear weapons and that this plan could indeed destabilise the region. It is against this backdrop that we must read the text of a heartfelt letter that Fulbright sent to Chester Bowles, JFK's acting Secretary of State, in May 1961: 34 Dear Mr.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 476

According to a June 19, 1972, confidential memorandum from L. Patrick Grey, acting FBI director, to Harry Robbins Haldeman, White House Chief of Staff to President Nixon, that was eventually never sent, Sturgis was deeply involved in Florida in organised crime activities with Santos Trafficante and Meyer Lansky. 37 In the three-year hiatus between Hitler's downfall and the birth of Israel in 1948, Ben-Gurion, as head of the Jewish Agency, was eager to circumvent the arms embargo maintained at that time by the US government. Paradoxically, the solution came from the most iconic US city. Since the Jewish mafia had the harbour of New York under its control, a close associate of Ben-Gurion was sent there. This man, Yehuda Arazi, had already been a daring Haganah agent in Romania, Hungary, and Italy during WWII. In the so-called Big Apple, Arazi used all his skills to set up a secret and efficient arm smuggling network by approaching Meyer Lansky. It was Lansky who transported the weapons to Israel on ships. 38 As Paul Lansky, his son, said, Israel was in dire need and asked his father for help—a fact he commented on with the rhetorical question of what would have happened if that assistance had been denied. 39 But Ben-Gurion was also behind the idea of shaping as a key to the expansion of Israeli power the Histadrut, the General Organisation of Workers in Israel. As an Israeli essayist, Tzohar, synthesised, it was Ben-Gurion who transformed the Histadrut into a national instrument for the realisation of Zionism. 40

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 500

But no less relevant is that Louis Bloomfield, the main shareholder of the CMC, was a key figure in the Histadrut and that Dov Biegun, a CMC member who was a British spy agent during WWII, was the general secretary of the US branch of the Histadrut, the National Committee for Labour Israel, 42 the one that continues to work diligently today to build a tough and unbreakable relationship between Israel and the United States by, among other things, promoting the massive purchase of Israeli bonds by the US—a move that is crucial to the building and consolidation of the Israeli state. The largest trade union federation in the US, the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, or AFL–CIO for short, soon also became the world’s largest non-Jewish holder of Israeli bonds. At the AFL–CIO headquarters in Washington, DC, there is the eloquent presence of a statue of former Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir. 43 During the Vietnam War, the AFL–CIO blindly supported the expansion of that conflict, going so far as to cause a very heated dispute between the AFL–CIO and Martin Luther King, Jr. over the latter’s anti-war stance. 44 In other words, both the CMC and Jack Ruby had ties to an Israeli institution that was hostile to what President Kennedy had tried to do in Vietnam and would have succeeded had he not been killed. Not to mention the precise accusation of Philip Agee, a former CIA agent who became a top enemy of CIA abuses after his resignation in 1968. Agee stated that the Histadrut was in full collusion with the Central Intelligence Agency. 45 In fact, the National Committee for Labor Israel is strongly accused today of trying to instigate far-right coups in Venezuela, 46 a goal strongly supported by the CIA. All these elements taken together ultimately give the otherwise meaningless words that Ruby repeated over and over again to his lawyer William Kunstler after the assassination of Lee Oswald on 24 November 1963 the right perspective:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 526

At that point, Ruby was suddenly declared insane by a Jewish doctor, Louis West, who was part of the CIA’s MK-ULTRA mind control project. We will come back to West and this project later. For now, let it be said that this event also confirms and puts into perspective the previously mentioned affidavit of Marita Lorenz during the 1985 defamation trial of the second ‘hobo,’ E. Howard Hunt, that there were three people in a Central Intelligence Agency safe house in Dallas the night before the assassination of JFK. The first two of these individuals were Frank Sturgis and E. Howard Hunt. The other was Jack Ruby. It is useful to reiterate that E. Howard Hunt was involved in a CIA covert project called QKENCHANT, along with Guy Bannister and Clay Shaw. And not less useful is the repetition that today Saint John Hunt, E. Howard’s beloved son, also agrees that Frank Sturgis and his father were indeed in Dallas to kill President Kennedy. Saint John Hunt’s claim is also based on his father’s confession, which he made some time before his death. In this confession, E. Howard Hunt names Lyndon Johnson and the CIA spymasters James Angleton, Cord Meyer, David Atlee Phillips, Frank Sturgis and William Harvey as co-conspirators, while the author of the fatal frontal shot in JFK's head is referred to as "French gunman grassy knoll." 48 Certainly,

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 610

Of equal importance is that one of the men at the helm of the Republic National Bank was Robert Storey, a close associate and collaborator of Jaworski. Not only had Storey been a longtime friend of President Johnson, having met JFK's successor before WWII, 53 but he had also been a spy recruiter for Allen Dulles since at least 1951. 54 Dulles' decision was the obvious fruit of Storey's past. Robert Storey had been active in US espionage since 1942. In April of that year, he joined the US armed forces as an intelligence officer. He served as Deputy Director of Intelligence with the Allied Air Forces in the Mediterranean on the staff of General Ira C. Baker. For his exceptional service behind the Iron Curtain, Robert Storey was awarded the Legion of Merit by the Commanding General of the Mediterranean Theater. 55

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 623

As we have seen at the end of the first part of this book, the National Conference of Christians and Jews was the brainchild of Everett Ross Clinchy, who was also the creator of its derived organisation, which Clinchy called World Brotherhood. Like the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, World Brotherhood had an opaque dual identity. Officially, it wanted to propagate world peace, but did exactly the opposite. In a letter to Allen Dulles dated April, 2, 1958, World Brotherhood is eloquently defined as the way to lend tremendous support to the efforts to which the then CIA director had committed himself. Among the members of World Brotherhood, as we have seen, were Dulles himself and John McCloy, who also became a member of the Warren Commission. But World Brotherhood also included Alfredo Pizzoni, the Italian banker who helped Allen Dulles finance Pace e Libertà. The latter was an anti-Marxist organisation led by Edgardo Sogno, who was also a protégé of Clare Boothe Luce, and CMC member Giuseppe Pièche. This means that, through these three individuals —Robert Storey, Allen Dulles and John McCloy— the covert entourage that revolved around Clay Shaw's Centro Mondiale Commerciale was squarely in the Warren Commission. This assertion is further confirmed by a recapitulation of the names of other World Brotherhood members. One of them was William Donovan, the director of the Office of Strategic Services, the forerunner of the Central Intelligence Agency. As we know, Donovan was the recruiter of an Italian scientist, Luigi Crocco. Luigi had a brother, Alfredo. Alfredo Crocco was a CMC member. One main ally of Alfredo Crocco was Renzo Rocca, an Italian spymaster. Rocca's generous funder was Vittorio Valletta. Valletta and Renzo Rocca were both protégés of a CIA agent and JFK's archenemy, William Harvey. Donovan's associate was Frank Gigliotti, the CIA agent and Freemason who was sent to Italy in 1960 to sign a pact with the local Freemasons against JFK, thanks to Giuseppe Pièche, the aforementioned CMC member. It goes in the same direction the presence in World Brotherhood of the Canadian businessman Samuel Bronfman. Bronfman was a very close associate of Mayer Lansky, the Jewish mobster and ally of Ben-Gurion and Frank Sturgis. 56 It will be explained in more detail in later pages that Samuel Bronfman was one of the secret financiers of Ben-Gurion's efforts to develop an Israeli nuclear arsenal at Dimona, and that another main financier of Dimona was Louis Bloomfield, the CMC's majority shareholder.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 653

Storey was also a member of the board of the Dallas Council on World Affairs. What is remarkable about this council is that another member of the board was Earle Cabell. 57 Earle Cabell was the mayor of Dallas when JFK made his fatal visit to that Texas city. Earle's brother was Charles Cabell, the deputy CIA director under Allen Dulles from April 23, 1953 to January 31, 1962. Two months after Dulles' resignation caused by the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion, President Kennedy also forced him to resign. Thanks to the documents now released, however, it emerged that Earle Cabell had been working for the CIA since 1956 at the time of the assassination of JFK. 58 But on the board of the Dallas Council on World Affairs also sat one Gordon McLendon. In an FBI report dated November 25, 1963, Ruby resolutely referred to him as "one of his closest friends." 59 McLendon was the owner of a Dallas radio station, KLIF, which he used constantly to spread politically conservative editorials. 60 When Ruby was arrested for shooting Lee Oswald, he exclaimed that he needed McLendon's help. In 1978, the House Select Committee on Assassinations discovered that McLendon was then working closely with David Atlee Phillips, the head of CIA operations in Cuba and a suspect in the JFK assassination, on a CIA propaganda front, as James W. Douglass explains in his esteemed essay JFK & the Unspeakable: Why He Died & Why It Matters, which adds:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 723

Thanks to this series of elements, we can now understand Ruby's presence at a meeting with Bernard Weissman and J. D. Tippit at Ruby's Carousel Club in Dallas on November 14, 1963. Weissman was the one who signed the infamous attack against JFK published by the Dallas Morning News on the day President Kennedy died. Tippit was the Dallas police officer who the Warren Commission claimed was killed by Oswald minutes after JFK's death, although this allegation is totally unfounded for many reasons that are well explained in Mark Lane's book Rush to Judgement. This meeting was the subject of almost all chapter 20 of the same book by Lane. Mark Lane had testified about it in person before the Warren Commission on March 4, 1964. Mark Lane's source was Thayer Waldo, a Fort Worth Star-Telegram reporter. The latter in turn had learnt about it from Paul Bridewell, also known as Phil Burns, according to an FBI teletype dated March 28, 1967, now in the National Archives. The news that Bridewell was the one who gave this information to Thayer Waldo is confirmed by Waldo himself in the book by Richard Warren Lewis, The Scavengers and Critics of the Warren Report: The Endless Paradox, which is based on an investigation by journalist Lawrence Schiller. This rendezvous became the mainstay of Dorothy Kilgallen's investigation into the assassination of President Kennedy, which she began in 1964 because she was certain that the Dallas ambush was the result of a conspiracy. She published a sensational article about it for the now defunct New York Journal-American. It was tellingly titled New Dorothy Kilgallen Exclusive: Tale of 'Rich Oil Man' at Ruby Club. Mrs. Kilgallen was a famous and respected reporter. Ernest Hemingway described her as "the greatest female writer in the world." She was also a friend of JFK. When Ruby was on trial in Dallas for the murder of Lee Oswald, Judge Joe B. Brown granted her a privilege that no other journalist was granted. She was allowed to spend thirty minutes alone in a room with Ruby. After his arrest, this was the only time Ruby could speak freely without being monitored by anyone. Even the guards were left outside the door. Miss Kilgallen's columns have only given a small part of what happened during this interview. Dorothy

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 752

On November 8, 1965, however, Dorothy Kilgallen was suddenly found dead, apparently by suicide. Mark Shaw, the author of several books about her, discovered an extensive body of evidence and inconsistencies that clearly indicate she was the victim of a murderer. The main facts supporting this conclusion are two. Let us examine them. The first is the death of Florence Pritchett, Kilgallen's best friend. This decease occurred just two days after Dorothy died. Dorothy Kilgallen had given her a draft of her discoveries about the assassination of JFK. Both Kilgallen's original and Pritchett's copy disappeared and were never recovered. This means that Jack Ruby's meeting with Weissman and Tippit was such a delicate affair that Dorothy Kilgallen was killed, and the same happened to her friend Florence. The second congruent element is exemplified by a German JFK assassination researcher, Joachim Joesten. In his essay How Kennedy Was Killed, the latter explains that Ruby, who had been under the custody of Dallas Sheriff Bill Decker, had been in perfect condition for more than three years. The prison doctor who regularly visited Ruby never found any health problems until December 9, 1966. However, once the possibility of a new trial in a different location arose, Jack Ruby suddenly died on the morning of January 3, 1967, preventing him from ever revealing the truth. Ruby's symptoms, persistent cough and nausea, and his subsequent almost instantaneous decline and death are entirely consistent with thallium poisoning. Thallium is odourless and tasteless.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 769

All of the above circumstances also finally clarify why Tippit was also murdered and why he was murdered in the Oak Cliff area of Dallas, where McLendon's aforementioned KLIF radio station was located. Furthermore, when Ruby killed Oswald in the basement of the Dallas police station, the employees of McLendon's KLIF radio station were in that basement. Also, as described in the Warren Commission Document 7, FBI Gemberling Report of 10 Dec 1963 re: Oswald, Weissman was employed by the Nuclear Development Corporation in White Plains, New York, from June 1956 to December 1957. Weissman's recruiter had been A. E. Surosky. I did research, and A. E. Surosky was an expert in the manufacture and quality control of fuel assemblies for Army power reactors. In addition, the Nuclear Development Corporation, White Plains, New York, operated from 1955 to 1963 under a licence from the Atomic Energy Commission, the US federal agency established in 1946 for the development, use, and control of nuclear energy for military and civilian applications. The AEC was later abolished by the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974. According to government documents, the Nuclear Development Corporation in White Plains was forced to close in 1963 because it was contaminated with uranium. The Department of Energy had originally considered remediating this site as part of the Formerly Utilized Sites Remedial Action Program, but this never happened. In 2000, a series of reports in the USA Today newspaper suggested that the Nuclear Development Corporation of America in White Plains, New York, had conducted nuclear weapons research for the Department of Energy during the Cold War.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 815

During his command of the 24th Infantry Division in West Germany, Walker had violated the Hatch Act of 1939 by attempting to influence the votes of his troops through right-wing propaganda. This serious incident naturally caused a public storm and led to a confrontation with President Kennedy. Edwin Walker resigned and moved to Dallas, where H. L. Hunt offered to finance Walker's campaign for governor of Texas. After new friction in 1962, Attorney General Robert Kennedy ordered Edwin Walker committed to a mental institution for a 90-day evaluation, but a Jewish psychiatrist, Thomas Szasz, along with right-wing groups, protested, and Edwin Walker was released after only five days. In early 1963, Robert Morris, Walker's attorney, convinced a Mississippi grand jury to acquit Walker. Like Walker, Weissman was a member of the John Birch Society. Its founder in December 1958 was Robert Welch, Jr., an ultraconservative and rabidly anticommunist activist from North Carolina. Robert Welch maintained excellent relations with the Jewish anti-communist community. In fact, he was supported by the American Jewish League Against Communism, and many of his closest associates and advisors were Jews, such as William Schlamm, coeditor of American Opinion, the journal of the John Birch Society; the late Alfred Kohlberg, a close friend of Welch and a member of the John Birch Society's national council; Julius Epstein, an Austrian Jew who had fled Europe for the United States and became one of the most rabidly anti-Communist members of the Office of War Information; Morrie Ryskind, a famous Jewish playwright who was also an ultraconservative activist.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 833

With all these notions in mind, we can now focus on the letter sent to Weissman. The person who wrote this message was one of his key associates, Larry Schmidt. Schmidt informed Weissman that they would need cash for their Dallas operation on a certain day. To prepare for this, they built up their credit at the Republic National Bank. We have already learnt that the CIA had been using this bank since the 1950s to handle large sums of money. Now we add that this bank also had close ties to the Jewish community. Let us take a closer look at these connections. Julius Pearlstone, a member of a prominent Dallas Jewish family, was one of the first men to lead the Republic National Bank. After his tenure, Fred Farrel Florence served as the bank's president from the 1920s until he died in 1960. Like Pearlstone, he was a Jewish, the son of Mose and Celia Freedman Fromowitz, who had lived in Lithuania until 1883. Fred Florence's wife was Helen Lefkowitz, a daughter of David Lefkowitz, then rabbi of Temple Emanuel of Dallas. 68 Florence possessed a keen business acumen and used the Republic National Bank for highly profitable endeavours. For example, he employed it to finance the extensive oil field in East Texas, the largest in the world for many years. Florence had an excellent relationship with Mr. Luce, the owner of Time magazine and husband of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, one of the worst enemies not only of JFK, but also of JFK's father and Jim Garrison. It was due to Florence that Time was able to buy most of the paper needed for the publication. It is no coincidence that one of Florence's best friends was Arthur Temple, vice chairman and largest shareholder of Time, Inc., which, in addition to Time, published other mass-circulation magazines, such as Sports Illustrated, Fortune, Money, People, and Life, and also owned cable television networks. Twenty years later, Temple's son, Arthur Temple, Jr., underwrote a six million dollar loan in favour of the Republic National Bank. The January 1959 issue of Banker Monthly reported that the Republic National Bank would have a new director, Alguer H. Meadows. Seven years earlier, in 1952, a US consortium led by oil exploration giant DeGolyer & McNaughton had arrived in Madrid to negotiate an oil drilling deal that we can refer to as the Schacht-Meadows-Skorzeny project because Hjalmar Schacht, Adolf Hitler's banker, was also involved, along with Alguer Meadows and Otto Skorzeny. 69 As we know, Hjalmar Schacht's father-in-law, Gutierrez Spadafora, was a member of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale; Skorzeny, in turn, was a Nazi who, meanwhile, had become an agent for the US espionage. According to Skorzeny's private papers, it was Donovan in person who, after a secret meeting with him in November 1945, recruited the Nazi. 70 But even more interesting, in this context, is what unveiled by Haaretz,

Israel's main newspaper: Skorzeny was also a Mossad Agent. 71 In late 1952, the Schacht-Meadows-Skorzeny venture started...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 977

Rockefeller undoubtedly had several reasons—or rather, motives—for alerting William Colby. The first was that Rockefeller, as it later turned out, had previously served on the White House Operations Coordinating Board. This panel had authorised some of the CIA's illegal activities that the Commission was investigating. 80 The second reason, instead, is that it was actually the Rockefeller Foundation, along with the CIA, that provided the money needed for scientist Donald Ewen Cameron to establish the Allen Memorial Institute at McGill University in Montreal, one of the places where the Central Intelligence Agency developed its secret brainwashing project called MK-ULTRA. 81 Third, one of Nelson Rockefeller's brothers, David, was the chief of Chase Manhattan Bank. 82 The Chase Manhattan Bank was linked to Banque Belgo-Centrade SA, whose managing director was a CMC member, Alberto Forte. The Banque Belgo-Centrade was a subsidiary of the Swiss-Israel Trade Bank, also known as SITB for short. The Israeli newspaper Haaretz revealed that the SITB was a Mossad front. The creator of SITB was Yehuda Assia. This prominent Jew admitted that he contributed half of the required capital, with the other half coming from the government of Israel. Yehuda Assia was responsible for collecting funds to create the Negev Nuclear Research Centre in Dimona against the strong opposition of John Kennedy. The US president knew that Israel was developing there, as it still does, its nuclear arsenal. It was Shimon Peres who appointed Assia to this role. 83

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,028

ranking military officer in NATO. We have already seen how Pighini, together with CMC member Bonfantini, took part in a subversive scheme in the 1970s, led by Edgardo Sogno and supported by Richard Nixon, Eugenio Cefis and Michele Sindona. Sindona, along with CIA officer William Harvey, was part of the anti-JFK front in Italy, as highlighted in another section of this book. Sindona's right-hand man was a certain Carlo Bordoni. Bordoni was the head of the London branch of the Swiss-Israel Trade Bank, also known as the Banque pour le Commerce Suisse-Israélien, during Kennedy's presidency. 87 All this sounds like an excellent confirmation of what a Jewish historian, Michael Karpin, wrote about Bloomfield and Dimona in his book The Bomb in the Basement: How Israel Went Nuclear and What That Means for the World. Read this very detailed extract:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,052

The connection between the Haifa Institute of Technology and Louis Bloomfield offers the opportunity to recall that Theodore von Kármán, a Jewish scientist who strongly opposed communism, was the president of the aeronautical engineering department at the same institute. In JFK and the Unspeakable Secret: Part One, we learnt of von Kármán's long-standing friendship with Alfredo Crocco, a member of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, and his brother, Luigi Crocco. We also learnt that, near the end of WWII, the Office of Strategic Services, the precursor to the CIA, recruited Luigi Crocco. This way, Luigi eventually became scientific partners with Theodore von Kármán in the NATO initiative to develop nuclear missiles. It is also certainly worth remembering that Samuel Bronfman, was a member of World Brotherhood and a close associate of Mayer Lansky, the Jewish mobster and ally of Ben-Gurion and Sturgis.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,090

As Jonathan Marshall writes in his book Dark Quadrant, the special relationship between Multer and Assia began with a letter written in March 1960. The letter's author was Irving Davidson. Davidson was a close associate of Hoffa, the president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. Hoffa had a harsh conflict with the Department of Justice, led by RFK, due to his involvement with organised crime. Davidson was a registered US agent for the Israeli military. He even informed the acting FBI director, Louis Patrick Gray III, of his close friendship with two Israeli military intelligence chiefs, Aharon Yariv and Elie Zeira. ⁹³ Given this background, it is not surprising that Irving Davidson asked Yehuda Assia in his letter to assist Abe Multer and his Bahamian bank to benefit from their various connections. Davidson also mentioned that Abe Multer was not only a supporter of Ben-Gurion, but he had also consistently fought for and supported Israel during his time as a congressman. Assia promptly replied, promising his full cooperation and expressing his intention to find qualified bankers in Switzerland who could work at the new bank.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,120

Finally, it is also worth revisiting the connection between Forte's Banque Belgo-Centrade and the Chase Manhattan Bank of David Rockefeller. This is because the Chase was also involved in a secretive alliance between Pope Wojtyla and P2. This deal was signed in the presence of Marcinkus, a high-ranking official of the Vatican. ⁹⁸ As a result of this alliance, Pope Wojtyla took the historic decision to recognize Israel as a state.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,139

Although with extreme reluctance, this is what JFK eventually did. On December 13, 1960, the New York Times reported the Israeli government was relieved that JFK had appointed Dean Rusk instead of Fulbright. 101 Historian James Stocker could not help but describe it as a victory of the Zionist lobby. 102 The point to grasp is that Rusk had a close association with the Rockefellers. Specifically, he served as the president of the Rockefeller Foundation from 1952 to 1960. As we have pointed out, this foundation financed the CIA's secret brainwashing project MK-ULTRA. John Foster, the brother of CIA Director Allen Dulles, was a trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation from 1935 to 1952. In 1951, Foster became the foundation chairman and, along with John D. Rockefeller III, supported the eugenics movement. 103 In other words, due to pressure from the Jewish lobby, JFK was compelled to appoint as his Secretary of State someone who was not exactly a moral champion. Actually, after John Kennedy's assassination, when Johnson confirmed Dean Rusk in his position, the latter actively assisted JFK's successor in totally reversing Kennedy's peace efforts by significantly escalating the Vietnam War.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,258

During WWII, Hotimsky's brother, Solomon, a fanatical anticommunist, served as a soldier in Italy as part of the Allied armed forces. 118 In other words, Solomon was present in Italy as a US soldier at the same time as James Angleton. It is worth remembering that Angleton's role in that country was that of head of US intelligence. It is also worth remembering that, due to this position, Angleton could recruit three individuals who were later connected to both the CMC and the plot against John Kennedy: Licio Gelli, the P2 leader; Michele Sindona, Gelli's closest ally within P2; and Valerio Borghese. This coincidence sheds new light on a particular incident that involved several members of Borghese's Xª MAS during the Negev war. In 1948, soon after the UN resolution on November 29, 1947, which assigned a part of Palestine to the Jews, an intense conflict arose between Israel and Egypt, the main neighbouring country of Israel. To counter and defeat the Egyptian threat, Israel enlisted the help of three ex Xª MAS members: Geo Calderoni, Fiorenzo Capriotti, and Nino Buttazzoni. 119 It is remarkable and, frankly, sad to think that Mussolini's top militia members were training Jewish soldiers. This training played a crucial role in Israel's success in the war, which ended with a significant defeat for Egypt. However, this decision was morally questionable. It is important to emphasise that Buttazzoni had already begun working for James Angleton in April 1946 under the pseudonym "Engineer Cattarini", and that Angleton received the manifesto of the Fronte Antibolscevico Italiano (Italian Anti-Bolshevik Front) precisely through Buttazzoni. 120 The Fronte was a far-right organisation founded and protected thanks to the significant support of none other than Giuseppe Pièche. 121 This manifesto was a solemn commitment. It affirmed that Italian neo-fascism was fully at the disposal of the US authorities to resolve the political situation in Italy according to the will and wishes of the US itself. Obviously, it was a fervent and formal offer to fight communism secretly by following the orders of the Americans. 122 The author of the manifesto was Romualdi, the former deputy leader of the Fascist Republican Party. As the historian Giuseppe Parlato explains in his book Fascisti senza Mussolini (Fascists without Mussolini), Pino Romualdi had already established a relationship with Angleton in the autumn of 1944. As with Borghese, it was thanks to Angleton's protection that Pino Romualdi was able to escape execution on April 27, 1945, as Giuseppe Parlato points out. The crux of the matter is that the Irgun, a Jewish terrorist group, was able to plant the explosive suitcases with time fuses that blew up the British Embassy in Rome on October 31, 1946, thanks to Romualdi's help. Like the bombs used against high-ranking British statesmen Ernest Bevin, Arthur Creech Jones, Stafford Cripps, and Anthony Eden, this explosion was a revenge attack on British opposition to...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,293

Of course, James Angleton was well aware of these events, as he finally admitted at his hearing before the Church Committee. On this occasion, he also revealed that he had helped the perpetrators of the attack on the embassy escape unpunished. The strong friendship between Angleton and Italian fascism developed during his time in Italy with his father for a large part of the Italian dictatorship. The Angletons revered Mussolini and his followers with enthusiasm. However, it might seem less understandable the close bond that Angleton and the Italian fascists had with the Jewish people after WWII. In effect, in 1940, Angleton expressed strong, passionate criticisms against the Jews. This is evident in a letter he wrote from New York City to one of his closest friends, the fascist poet Ezra Pound. This message was referenced and quoted by historian Jefferson Morley in his book The Ghost. This is how we now know the intense acrimony that James Angleton expressed towards the US press for supporting the British instead of Nazi Germany. The letter also contained this antisemite rant:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,344

As a direct result, the Israeli and Italian secret services have established covert and intensive cooperation at the highest level. 128 This is, of course, a particularly interesting circumstance because, as we well know, one of the most important Italian secret services at the same time was the Antincendi, and the head of the Antincendi was none other than General Pièche, the later member of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, who was also an important accomplice of Gigliotti, the CIA agent whose patron was Angleton.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,351

It is worth mentioning, at this point, that Angleton was not only the head of the CIA Counterintelligence division but, since the 1950s, also the head of the Israeli Desk of the CIA through which a secret link was established between the CIA and the Mossad and Angleton became directly involved in Dimona. Let us begin with the testimony of a Jewish New York Times reporter, Tad Szulc, before the aforementioned Church Committee. At that time, Szulc was already a journalist with a long and prestigious career. His terrific front-page article that broke the story of the Bay of Pigs invasion under the celebre headline Anti-Castro Units Trained to Fight at Florida Bases on April 7, 1961, just ten days before the invasion, had made him one of the best known and most trusted journalists in the world. That's why the Church Committee on June 10, 1975, was so eager to hear him about the covert hand of the CIA behind the development of Israel's nuclear arsenal. What Tad Szulc said was so explosive that a deep silence fell over it for nearly half a century. It was only in April 2018 that the National Archives finally released his statement. 129 This is how it began:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,381

It was clearly a yes, and Szulc decided at this point that it was the right moment to use the details obtained from his source as a means of getting Angleton to tell more. He asked Angleton if he could confirm the involvement in this operation of a British-born scientist who had become a US citizen in 1959: Wilfred Basil Mann, a highly influential radionuclide metrologist. Angleton confirmed this. However, he also warned that any disclosure of Mann's participation could have serious consequences, including damage to US national security and interests, damage to US intelligence assets, Middle East negotiations, and collaboration between the Central Intelligence Agency and British intelligence. There was even a concrete risk that Mann would take his own life, Angleton said. In other words, when confronted by such a knowledgeable Szulc, Angleton tried to dissuade his interlocutor by admitting that the information was correct, but claiming that it was crucial for national security and to prevent deaths to keep it confidential. This is certainly a common tactic in such a situation. However, the rest of the conversation suggests that there was more. Let us see why. When a perplexed Szulc asked for a more intelligible explanation, Angleton told him that Mann had been involved in the defections of Donald McClean and Guy Burgess to the USSR in the 1950s. At that time, Mann was part of a joint US-British nuclear group stationed at the British Embassy in Washington. Angleton assured Szulc that Mann had even played a role in the defection of Kim Philby, who had been a close friend of Angleton's before he fled to Moscow. Angleton concluded by saying that this was a complicated situation involving double agents and it was because of this that Mann had never been arrested or prosecuted. Angleton's answer is extremely intriguing and attention-grabbing. The way he refers to them as "double agents" suggests that not only Mann, but also McClean, Burgess, and Philby were working as double agents for Angleton. In other words, McClean, Burgess, and Kim Philby's defection was not genuine. This well-known group continued to work for Western intelligence without any interruptions. Actually, there is a factual element in favour of this conclusion. Mann worked without any problem for the US National Bureau of Standards in Washington from 1951 to 1980. As we have seen, he could even become a US citizen in 1959. The US National Bureau of Standards is a stunning example of misleading name. It has multiple sections, including the National Engineering Laboratory and the Institute for Computer Sciences and Technology. These two sections offer scientific and technological services to various entities, such as the US military, government, and federal agencies, including the NSA and CIA. A notable example is the Bureau's assistance to the NSA in developing encryption systems and its contribution to the establishment of ARPANET, the military computer network, in collaboration with...

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,486

With all this in mind, we can now understand that Angleton saw JFK's attempts to sabotage the Israeli nuclear programme as an issue with two negative implications. On the one hand, Angleton was aware that, in this way, JFK was putting the alliance between Mossad and the CIA at risk. On the other hand, James Angleton was afraid that John Kennedy could discover and expose that he secretly supported Israel's nuclear development. This additional fear gave Angleton another clear motive to assassinate JFK. Recently declassified German documents, which we will discuss in full detail later, confirm that this risk became very real shortly before JFK's assassination.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,502

This implies that Angleton believed that he had the authority to oppose with any means government decisions that conflicted with his own interests, even if his opposition would have the most severe consequences. JFK's visit to Dallas was a perfect opportunity, and Angleton sized it without scruples.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,688

In effect, Israel had been eager to wrest these territories from Egypt ever since the covert Operation Susannah, a false-flag plan that because of its extreme Machiavellian nature, Ben-Gurion undertook in 1954 even behind the backs of Israeli Prime Minister Sharett and Defence Minister Pinhas Lavon. The purpose of Susannah was to disrupt the friendly relations between the US and Egypt. Ben-Gurion's negative view of Islam and his desire for territory, as described, made it impossible for him to accept an alliance between Egypt and the US. Therefore, in the spring of 1954, US libraries, offices of the US Information Agency, theatres, and US-owned commercial buildings in Cairo and Alexandria were blown up with dynamite. These attacks were falsely blamed on the Muslim Brotherhood and the Egyptian communists. Initially, things seemed to go according to plan. The US government believed that the explosions were actually caused by Egyptian Marxists and religious fanatics. However, just one month later, when the White House was extremely angry and close to ending its alliance with Egypt, there was a major change. The entire group of 13 Jewish spies, whom Ben-Gurion had placed in Egypt many months earlier, was discovered and arrested by the Egyptian police. The spies admitted to being the actual perpetrators and provided information about the locations of their workshops and the secret communication devices used to give them instructions. Today, thanks to Israeli historian Livia Rokach, we can even read the contents of one of these instructions. Here it is: 146

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,708

David Ben-Gurion and his people appeared to be free of guilt for as long as six years. The use of forged documents suggested that Pinhas Lavon had approved the sabotage campaign, and he ultimately became the scapegoat for the entire operation, resulting in the scandal being undeservedly called the Lavon Affair. However, in 1960, the forgery was uncovered and a committee of seven Israeli cabinet members declared Pinhas Lavon not responsible. But instead of surrendering to the overwhelming evidence as he should have, David Ben-Gurion stubbornly and conveniently continued with his farcicle charade. He declared that the decision of the committee was unacceptable and theatrically resigned in protest, leading to new elections. It is noteworthy that we now know that President Kennedy expressed his deep interest in the Lavon affair during a conversation with Ogden R. Reid, the US ambassador to Israel until January 19, 1961, held on the last day of January 1961. 147 Now, let us add to JFK's interest in this scandal the information from a confidential report. Although written on March 17, 1961, this document was only recently declassified. The recipient of this report was the then chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who happened to be Senator Fulbright, JFK's initial selection for Secretary of State. As we know, President Kennedy had instead to appoint Dean Rusk due to intense protests from Israel.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,731

What emerges from the above information is that both JFK and one of his closest political friends were strongly interested in uncovering the truth about Operation Susannah and that this interest was obviously seen as a threat by Ben-Gurion. However, there is another document that must be considered. It was called Organization Order-Military Government in State of Emergency, was written in August 1963, during JFK's presidency, and its author was the Israeli Defence Forces. On the one hand, this document provides additional evidence that Israel had operative plans to seize Egyptian territories much earlier than the Six Day War. On the other hand, it raises concerns that these conquests could be short-lived due to international pressures or agreements that could force Israel to relinquish control of these territories. It is clear that this allusive circumlocution was a way to indirectly say that Kennedy would have certainly nullified their expansionistic efforts. With this premise in mind and considering it was written just three months before the assassination of the 35th US President in Dallas, it is therefore really disturbing to read another allusive statement in the same document. This:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,746

It is a fact that only because of the assassination of JFK did Johnson become president of the United States. And it was none other than President Johnson who gave Israel the green light to the Six Day War. And it was once again Johnson who, through his chief special assistant, Joseph A. Califano, Jr., sent a private message to reassure the US Jewish lobby that, even though he had to officially pose as neutral, he completely still stood with Israel. And it was Johnson who, at the end of that conflict, did not call for a withdrawal of Israeli forces from the immense portions of territories they illegally occupied, mostly at the expense of Palestinians. Instead, he considered those lands a de facto permanent part of Israel. Johnson's endorsement of the savage Israeli annexation policy was finalised through a secret written agreement with Israel's Deputy Prime Minister Abba Eban. 148 In this way, Israel tripled its original size. Even worse, this conflict has been constantly used since then as a precedent for allowing war against a state that is speculated to launch an attack soon. It has even been used as a pretext for initiating a preemptive assault on a Nation that, on the mere theoretical basis of complacent projections, is expected to attack much later on. We can define the present world history of injustices and tensions as the endless seventh day of this war. The opposite of the international scenery that JFK dreamed of.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,832

The first is that Gehlen and Globke had started working together from 1950. The second is that in his autobiographical memoir Der Dienst, Gehlen candidly admitted that under his direction the BND actively helped the Israelis by giving them expert advice in setting up the Mossad. Gehlen even assisted the Mossad in placing key agents in Arab countries. The collaboration between Mossad and Gehlen went on in spite of the fact that, as Klaus-Dietmar Henke, a respected expert on this subject discovered, Globke helped Gehlen to illegally snoop in leftist associations even though the founders of these association were parents of Holocaust victims. 152 The BND was actually established with the full approval of the Central Intelligence Agency. Given all this information, it is not surprising that the CIA helped Ben-Gurion and Adenauer by ensuring that any mention of Hans Globke was entirely erased from any document related to the trial, as well as from a serialisation of Adolf Eichmann's memoirs in a US magazine. 153

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,960

It would be too great an omission if we did not mention at this point that one of Lekem's top agents was Arnon Milchan. Milchan later became a well-known Israeli film producer. One of these films was Oliver Stone's JFK; an excellent feature film although, by coincidence, does not explore Israeli involvement in the assassination of John Kennedy. Maybe the problem was that if this exploration had been done, then Milchan would have become not only the producer, but also a character of the film. The hiring of Milchan in the Lekem took, in fact, place back in the 1960s, during JFK presidency, and his hirer was none other than Shimon Peres. This means —repetita iuvant— the political father, together with Ben-Gurion, of Dimona. It also means that Milchan's recruiter was the same high-ranking Israeli politician whose brother, Gershon, was a member of the CMC, as we well know. The revelation about Milchan comes directly from the mouth of the same Shimon Peres. It happened during an interview on February 8, 2010, with Meir Doron and Joseph Gelman, the Jewish authors of a book with the telling title Confidential: The Life of Secret Agent Turned Hollywood Tycoon Arnon Milchan. On this occasion, Shimon Peres spoke so absolutely crystal clear:

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 1,978

advantage, strategically, diplomatically and technologically. One of the countries that maintain secret relations with Israel, although it officially had none, was South Africa. The reason for this secret was that South Africa was a racist dictatorship. Who led this regime was, in fact, a white minority of European origin that hated and segregated the black indigenous majority. This was called apartheid. During a long interview with the Israeli documentary television programme Uvda on November 25, 2013, the Hollywood producer and spymaster had to admit that he used his role to improve the extremely negative image of the apartheid in return for Israel's secret support in the acquisition of uranium. 160 In this way, Milchan indirectly recognised as true the content of a book written in 2010 about the extremely close relationship that Milchan had with Eschel Rhodie, a top South African apartheid politician and spin doctor. Their collaboration aimed to find methods to improve the image of Rhodie's country. The author of this essay, Sasha Polakow-Suransky, cannot certainly be suspected of antisemitism. He is the son of several South African Jews and anti-apartheid activists. What follows is a significant excerpt: 161

Note:

Skorzeny's getaway had many consequences. The first of these was that he could establish intensive relations with Eichmann. Another German document found by historian Gaby Weber reveals that Eichmann and Skorzeny had formed an anticommunist coalition in the postwar period that was well known to and fully supported by the US, making it a focal point for global neo-Nazis. 185 The second consequence was that Skorzeny met Ilse von Finkenstein, whom he married in 1954. Ilse's uncle was none other than Hjalmar Schacht. One result of this marriage was that Schacht and Otto Skorzeny became accomplices in money transactions in Spain that were closely linked to neo-Nazis, as the historian Martin Lee aptly describes: 186

Note:

Although Skorzeny worked with prominent figures of the Third Reich, such as Adolf Eichmann and Hjalmar Schacht, the Mossad nevertheless decided to recruit him for military operations against Egypt. This connection between Skorzeny and the Mossad reveals another worrisome aspect of Skorzeny. Let us start with the fact that Zapruder's film, along with several other films and photographs taken on November 22, 1963, clearly shows a too-strange bystander very close to John Kennedy. This person is commonly referred to as "The Umbrella Man" because, despite the sunny weather, he was the only person holding an umbrella and even opened it in front of JFK, who reacted by painfully grabbing his neck. On November 8, 1978, during her testimony before the HSCA, Ms. Rose Mary Willis mentioned that she found the umbrella man "conspicuous." How did she come to this assessment? Because he "appeared to be more concerned with opening and closing the umbrella than dropping to the ground like everyone else at the time of the shots." 187

Note:

The thing to notice is that all of these Nazi soldiers unanimously stated that Skorzeny wanted to reach his goal by utilising poisoned ammunition. We must couple this information with another declassified document of MI5, the British spy agency. 192 It says that Skorzeny, after his capture at the end of WWII, had a strange bullet in his large pistol, as it bore a red cross on the tip. This circumstance immediately attracted the attention of his gaolers. Although he immediately admitted that it contained poison, Skorzeny initially tried to convince the British that these bullets were manufactured and issued solely for suicidal purposes. But in the end, he had to admit that the Kriminaltechnisches Institut der Sipo had made them at his request and that their finality was assassinations of the utmost importance.

Note:

Another particularly valuable piece of information comes from Colonel Fletcher Prouty, one of the individuals most aware of the covert facets of the Dallas ambush. Prouty stated direct knowledge of a weapon capable of firing a poisoned projectile. Prouty specified that it was manufactured at Fort Detrick, the top centre for the US biological weapons programme for a quarter of a century, from 1943 to 1969. 194 Fletcher Prouty's allegations are consistent with what Charles Senseney disclosed to the Church Committee. As a former member of Fort Detrick's Special Operations Division, Senseney revealed to the US Senate panel the development of a secret system. Its codename was M-1 and its particularity was that it could fire a poisoned dart from anywhere. When the Committee asked Charles Senseney about the effects, he replied:

195

Note:

Doctor Finck failed another examination in the same way. That was in 1996, this time before the Assassination Records Review Board. It is now clear that the goal of those who ordered to avoid dissecting the wound to his neck was to conceal the use of a dart to immobilise the President. However, the Zapruder film clearly shows not only that the first wound that struck JFK was to the neck, but also that Kennedy was completely paralysed from that moment on. Another goal was to allow the Warren Commission to confirm that the wound to the neck was an exit wound. This falsehood was the only way to pretend that nobody hit JFK from the front, which is proof of a conspiracy, since the Warren Commission itself puts Lee Oswald behind President Kennedy. For the same reason, the Warren Commission wrote that the bullet that hit John Kennedy in the neck was the same bullet that shortly after hit the other politician present in the presidential car: John Connally. This absurdity is popularly known as Magic Bullet Theory, the obvious definition for something that contradicts the incontrovertible laws of physics. This contradiction is exemplarily explained in Gaeton Fonzi's book The Last Investigation. Fonzi quoted a statement by Ronald Coy Jones, a doctor who treated JFK at Parkland Hospital, where the POTUS lay before he was arbitrarily transferred to Bethesda Naval Hospital. Jones claimed that if the neck wound was an exit wound, the only way to justify its minimal size would be to assume that it was caused by a bullet at such low velocity "that you would think the bullet would have just made it through the soft tissue and come out the other side of the skin." If that was the case, it certainly wouldn't have had enough force to penetrate Connally.

Note:

And now that we also have a body of evidence about the assistance of former Nazi criminals in the development of the experiments at Fort Detrick, this whole matter would certainly be worthy of further investigation. The first to talk about this connection were historians Carroll and Loftus, 197 and also the US Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research on the top-secret MK-ULTRA project came to the same conclusion: Under an agreement reached with the Army in 1952, the

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,416

Now that this is clear, there is another crucial aspect to consider. To explain it, let us start with a 2012 US auction of Otto Skorzeny's entire personal archive of documents. This way, this treasure trove, which spans from 1947 to around the time of Skorzeny's death, is now in the hands of Ralph P. Ganis, a veteran of three services: the USMC, the US Army, and the United States Air Force. This key material includes a photograph. It shows Skorzeny with CIA officers David Atlee Phillips and Cord Meyer, the divorced husband of Mary Meyer, a lover of John Kennedy assassinated in 1964 because she had information about the network that killed JFK. The trio in the picture are sitting in a Learjet and are very relaxed and friendly towards each other. This picture is also relevant when we link it to a memorandum we have already reported on. The author of this document was Cord Meyer himself, and the subject was the relationship between the Central Intelligence Agency and the Centro Mondiale Commerciale. Finally, this picture is also noteworthy because of a statement we have already stressed. It comes from RFK, Jr. who, in one of his essays, American Values, points out that the House Select Committee on Assassinations, which in the 1970s reopened the investigation into the murder of his uncle, considered Phillips and his then boss Harvey to be prime suspects in the murder. 198 Actually, I have offered new evidence that Harvey was indeed a central figure in the anti-JFK front, along with CMC-linked Italian spymaster Renzo Rocca, for whom Harvey was a direct accomplice. Because of all the above facts, it is now time to talk about how the Nazi Skorzeny takes us back to a specific member of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale: Giuseppe Pièche.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,474

But let us now describe the contents of another document. It reveals a direct link between Guérin-Sérac and a leading member of the US Republican Party at the time: Barry Goldwater. This document exposes Goldwater as a financier of Ordre et Tradition and that other far-right elements of his political party did the same. 205 Ordre et Tradition was a fascist organisation founded in 1966 by the Aginter Press. But it would be better to say that it was a parthenogenesis because the leader of both organisations was Guérin-Sérac himself. This fact unmasks as false Barry Goldwater's claim that he was a loyal rival of JFK, as he pretended. At this point, we cannot help but mention once again the part in Gerry Hemming's leaks where he unveils that people in Lisbon who supported the OAS were involved in the assassination of JFK. As we said when mentioning this sentence, it is clear that Hemming was alluding precisely to Aginter. Another document worth highlighting, that the historian Giannuli found in the archives of the Italian Polizia di Prevenzione (Preventive Police), describes the Unione Mediterranea Anticomunista (Mediterranean Anti-Communist Union), a body set up in 1961 precisely by the Armée Secrète. According to the document, the Unione Mediterranea Anticomunista included Italian neo-fascist activists, members of the Portuguese and Spanish dictatorships, and neo-Nazis under the leadership of Otto Skorzeny. 206

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,530

Effron admitted, however, that his uncle was for sure involved in top-secret activities, as several circumstances unmistakably show. For example, when he visited his law office in Washington, DC, as a teenager, he noticed that there was a wooden desk and a few wooden chairs, but no bookshelves. Another oddity was that his uncle travelled frequently and extensively, even though he had no visible means of support. It was also suspicious that Reuben Efron spoke fluent Russian, Lithuanian, Hebrew, Yiddish and German. And it was also suspicious that he wrote a huge number of articles for Foreign Affairs Quarterly, side by side with people like Henry Kissinger. 208 Reuben Efron also played a role in peace negotiations and talks on the resettlement of war refugees after WWII. He accompanied US Senator Richard Russell, who was to become a member of the Warren Commission, on an official trip to the Soviet Union in October 1955, and acted as translator for Marina Oswald, Lee's Russian-speaking widow, when the Warren Commission interviewed her. Too much for someone who pretended to be just a lawyer. 209

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,542

The dual affiliation of Reuben Efron to the CIA, but also to the Mossad, fits in with the fact that the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, as I said before, was based on the same mixture. The CMC was the most logical outgrowth of James Angleton's so-called Israeli Desk, where the Mossad and the Central Intelligence Agency worked together, and Reuben Efron was a protege of Angleton. So, it makes perfect sense that Reuben Efron wore the uniform of two teams, to use a sporting metaphor. The question is whether Lee Oswald had the same dual affiliation. For is it not obvious that the monitoring of Oswald's loyalty was in the hands of the two spy agencies to which he belonged? The fact that Fred O'Sullivan, a friend of Oswald since childhood, who was a police officer in New Orleans from the 1960s until 1973, eventually converted to Judaism, changed his name to Efraim, and went to Israel to work precisely for the Mossad, certainly points in that direction. Like Oswald, O'Sullivan knew one of Clay Shaw's closest associates,

David Ferrie. More specifically, Efraim O'Sullivan, before being haired in the police, was a cadet in the Civil Air Patrol, a congressionally chartered corporation that serves as a civilian auxiliary of the Air Force, and recruited Oswald for the CAP. This is how Ferrie and Lee Oswald knew each other. As the article in the Israeli newspaper Haaretz, which broke this story, pointed out, O'Sullivan persistently repeated that the assassination of John Kennedy was a mafia conspiracy. This accusation is one of the red herrings most often used to obscure the truth about this murder. 210 It was not the first O'Sullivan's lie on this topic. He had already made another enormous misleading claim about the Dallas ambush when the Warren Commission interviewed him. He repeatedly went along with his interlocutors that Oswald and had never met David Ferrie, even though both were in the CAP. Ferrie was a very close associate of Clay Shaw. Therefore, Jim Garrison questioned him and concluded that Ferrie was another person involved in the assassination of JFK. Garrison's accusation is consistent with the testimony of witnesses before the US Select Committee on Assassinations and the US House of Representatives. They stated that shortly before the Dallas ambush, in the autumn of 1963, Ferrie flanked Guy Banister, another close associate of Clay Shaw, to help top mob boss Carlos Marcello bring a court case against John Kennedy's brother Robert Kennedy. In 1993, Frontline, an excellent investigative journalism programme run by the Public Broadcasting Service, obtained an extraordinary group photo. This picture, taken eight years before John Kennedy's assassination, showed Oswald and David Ferrie with other Civil Air Patrol cadets at a cookout. PBS subsequently released this statement: 211

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,578

As you just read, four CAP members, John Ciravolo, Tony Atzenhoffer, Colin Hammer, and Chuck Frances, stated on the 30th anniversary of the assassination of JFK that Lee Oswald and Ferrie knew each other. Frances even said this to the FBI after the assassination. We must bear in mind that the face of David Ferrie was unmistakable. Due to a rare skin disease, alopecia areata, he was bald and had no eyelashes. He wore a toupee and fake eyebrows. In addition to these four, there is a fifth witness, James Waters, a copilot with Eastern Airlines in New Orleans in the 1960s when Ferrie was a captain with the same company. The year before JFK died, Ferrie hosted a party at his home, and Waters was one of the attendees. When seeing Oswald's picture on TV screens and the front pages of all newspapers in the days after November 22, 1963, he could not help but exclaim: "Oh, my God, I met that guy at Dave Ferrie's!". What had jogged Water's memory was that Lee Oswald looked lost at this party, all alone, while everyone else was enjoying themselves. You could almost sense that he felt out of place.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,649

Although he was sentenced to life detention for espionage offences in 1987, Pollard was granted Israeli citizenship while still in prison in 1995 and was released in November 2015. Five years later, he moved to Israel and settled in Jerusalem. 218 The crucial point is who recruited Pollard for Israeli espionage: Rafi Eitan. We will come back to him later, as Eitan made a shocking public endorsement of an extremist right-wing party, Alternative for Germany, in 2018 and collaborated with Otto Skorzeny on Israeli intelligence operations in the summer of 1963. As we know, Skorzeny was a former Nazi officer with many points of contact with the CMC. This is exactly the opposite of the prosecution of Nazi war criminals that the ADL sought according to the false assurances of Arnold Forster. Eitan was the director of Lekem, the Israeli intelligence agency responsible for the secret recruitment of scientists and technicians with the skills needed to develop Israel's nuclear programme. One of Rafi Eitan's most relevant agents since the 1960s was Arnon Milchan, who later became the film producer of Oliver Stone's JFK, which, coincidentally, makes no mention of Israeli involvement in the assassination of John Kennedy. During his presidency, Kennedy supported a campaign to expose organisations in the United States that had fraudulently obtained tax-exempt or tax-deductible status by concealing their political nature. The sponsor of this campaign was the Internal Revenue Service, the US government agency responsible for collecting federal taxes and enforcing federal tax laws. The IRS thus provided the technical means necessary for this endeavour. JFK's brother, Attorney General Robert Kennedy, strongly backed the programme and committed himself to defending the IRS against any lawsuits that might arise. The notable aspect is that one of the targets of this campaign was precisely the Anti-Defamation League. 219

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,775

As we see, Minnis confirms the existence of a connection between Johnson and the Republic National Bank of Dallas, a front for the CIA. This bank, as we know, was run by Jews. Jews who, as the funding in favour of the far-right oil magnate makes clear, followed James Angleton's idea of an alliance between Jews and fascists against communism. We have already examined Johnson's close friendship with Sarah T. Hughes, one of the trustees of the Hoblitzelle Foundation, which was used by the Republic National Bank of Dallas to broker CIA funds. Ms. Hughes was a judge in the US District Court for the Northern District of Texas and as such administered the oath of office to President Johnson after the assassination of JFK. In addition, one of the men at the helm of Republic National Bank was Robert Storey, a friend of Johnson from before WWII. Robert Storey had also been a spy recruiter for Allen Dulles since at least 1951. As for the Anti-Defamation League, not only did Lyndon Johnson take no action to stop their abusive tax exemption, but in early 1965 he even received the Anti-Defamation League's "America's Democratic Legacy Award". DAVID

Note:

Based on David H. Byrd's declaration in 1955 that Byrd Uranium Corp. was "a wholly owned subsidiary of Byrd Oil Corp," 230 this means that the uranium division of Byrd Oil also passed into the hands of A. M. Abernethy. Crucially, A. M. Abernethy was under Israeli control, as he had been working with an Israeli licence since 1953, which he obtained thanks to another top Jew, Arie Ben-Tovim, who became his business partner. 231 Arie Ben-Tovim was first and foremost a former prominent diplomat. He was Israeli consul in Montreal in the 1949-50 biennium and in New York City in the 1951-52 biennium. 232 The most important fact, however, is that Arie Ben-Tovim was also a member of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale. This long series of connections is even more astonishing when considered together with the revelations of Sol Estes. 233 The latter was a whistleblower who belonged to the crème de la crème of the most powerful people in Dallas. Estes stated that Byrd was indeed involved in the conspiracy against John Fitzgerald Kennedy. In addition, Byrd was a co-founder of the Civil Air Patrol. 234 As we have already explained, one of Clay Shaw's closest associates, David Ferrie, was a CAP member. At this point it is no less important to recapitulate what came out, thanks to Clay Shaw's address books, about the man who in turn killed Oswald: Jack Ruby. These address books, which, as we know, were confiscated by Garrison after Shaw's accusation of involvement in the assassination of JFK, contained the names of very interesting people. One of them was Tom Cox, whose home at 4017-C Rawlings, Dallas, was very close to Jack Ruby's home, which itself was located at 3929 Rawlings, as listed in the City Directory. Tom Cox was an employee of Dresser Industries, and on Dresser's board of directors was Prescott Bush, the father of CIA director and later U.S. president George H. W. Bush: George H. W. Bush. And thanks to a letter from Prescott Bush to President Dwight Eisenhower's national security apparatus dated March 25, 1953, we are now aware that Dresser Industries' long-time CEO, Henry Neil Mallon, a close friend of both Prescott Bush and Allen Dulles, referred potential candidates for espionage jobs to the director of the Central Intelligence Agency and often provided CIA employees with fake employment. In other words, Dresser Industries, like the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, was another CIA front organisation. This fact perfectly explains why another Dresser employee was Hans Gisevius, one of Allen Dulles' most trusted agents, while Dresser's advisor was none other than the billionaire inexplicably linked to Oswald: George de Mohrenschildt. The point is that Dresser had an atomic branch in the 1960s. 235 For completeness, we should add that this branch was still active in the 1970s when a major catastrophe occurred. It was the worst disaster at a commercial nuclear power plant in the United States. A faulty Dresser valve caused the partial meltdown in the second...

Note:

The first of them was Philippe de Vosjoli, a high-ranking member of French espionage who at one point became a close associate of a leading OAS operative, Jacques

Soustelle. Soustelle and Philippe de Vosjoli both felt betrayed by Charles de Gaulle's willingness to grant Algeria independence. But for the same reasons, de Vosjoli was also close to three top CIA agents. They were James Angleton, 240 Richard Bissell and Richard Helms. 241 The shameful result was that from that moment on, any information that reached Philippe de Vosjoli's desk was immediately and secretly available to the CIA. Not less interesting is the other man named in the Italian document as recruiter of Guérin-Sérac for the Central Intelligence Agency: Jean René Marie Souètre, another leading figure of the Organisation Armée Secrète. The Italian document reports another important fact, namely that Guérin-Sérac introduced Jean Souètre to a top Italian spy, Guido Giannettini, in Lisbon in 1964 in the presence of an unspecified member of the Portuguese espionage agency Polícia Internacional e de Defesa do Estado (PIDE). Giannettini, who a year later, as we have already learnt, took part as a speaker in the meeting at the Hotel Parco dei Principi, at which the plans for the Italian strategy of tension were theorised, was himself a member of both the Armée Secrète and Aginter. 242 Souètre got to know him precisely because of Giannettini's involvement in these two organisations. A short time later, the Italian document analyses the contents of a report by the Portuguese spy agency Serviço de Detecção e Coordenação de Informações. This report is fully consistent with the above premise. Jean Souètre is mentioned in it as the head of a task force in Angola under another OAS member, Jacques Depret. The PIDE and Guérin-Sérac supported Souètre's mission. The aim was to help Moïse Tschombe's efforts to depose the socialist Prime Minister of the Congo, Patrice Lumumba, who was then actually murdered, to succeed. Depret himself described the affair in the book Coup d'Etat at Brazzaville, published in 1976. Further confirmation of Jean Souètre's involvement in Aginter came from Depret when the French essayist Frederic Laurent interviewed him for his book L'Orchestre Noir.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,917

Souètre certainly had good reasons to wish for JFK's death. John Kennedy was not only a supporter of Algerian independence, but also a staunch advocate of the right to self-determination for every African nation. Souètre's involvement in the CIA and Belgian efforts to prevent the true independence of the Congo through the assassination of Patrice Lumumba makes it clear that Souètre and JFK were soldiers of two irreconcilable fronts. It is not just a detail that the Congo was rich in uranium and the CIA wanted this mineral, essential for the construction of nuclear weapons, to remain in the hands of NATO, as was the case when the Congo was still a Belgian colony and has been again since the assassinations of Patrice Lumumba and JFK.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,923

Jay Salby used a variety of pseudonyms, such as Castor, Jay Sablosky, Hugh Franklyn, and my research has led me to believe that even the name Jay Simon Salby was in fact a pseudonym, just like Guérin-Sérac, whose real surname was Guillou. The use of false names was indeed very common among Aginter members. When he worked for Aginter Press, Stefano Delle Chiaie, whom we will discuss later, was known as Giovanni Martelli, and Souètra also used pseudonyms, as we have just seen. This precaution is obvious. All these people needed to protect themselves during their abysmally risky covert operations, but another crucial necessity was to disguise their past, which for Salby meant his involvement as a US incognito in the failed 1961 invasion of Cuba. This went so far that Castro personally labelled Salby a very dangerous enemy in a radio broadcast, according to Italian newspapers. It is therefore no surprise that the Italian neo-fascist Pierluigi Concutelli describes Jay Simon Salby as the top man at the Central Intelligence Agency in Madrid in the 1970s. In fact, Salby was not only closely associated with Yves Guérin-Sérac and Delle Chiaie, but his own responsibilities within the Aginter Press were so impressively relevant that he was involved in the series of terrorist attacks against Algerian targets in Europe. 243 It is significant that Algeria, together with Israel, is the country at the centre of another passage of Guido Giannettini's remarkable testimony. In this part, Guido Giannettini explains that "the Israelis were interested in the French endeavours in Algeria as an anti-Arab front." Finally, there are some other facts to consider. For example, that Aginter was born in Portugal and spread at the very time that nation's ambassador was George W. Anderson, an admiral who got into a serious conflict with Kennedy over Cuba during the missile crisis. George W. Anderson specifically wanted to disobey JFK by blowing up a Soviet ship. 244 Needless to say, this is the umpteenth circumstance that supports Hemming's above statement about the involvement of Aginter Press in the Dallas ambush. The second fact you should certainly think about is that Jay Simon Salby was actually associated with a very interesting character. His name is William Buckley, 245 and he was not only an ultra-conservative CIA agent and long-time friend of H. L. Hunt, but also the man we already know because there is evidence of his own involvement in the assassination of John Kennedy. 246 But let us add what Enrico de Boccard said, one of the speakers at the recently mentioned 1965 meeting at the Hotel Parco dei Principi in Rome, which was financed by Renzo Rocca, the Italian spymaster who was so close to the CMC and Giovanni de Lorenzo. Here is de Boccard's statement: The

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 2,956

Similarly, an Italian right-wing extremist named Vincenzo Vinciguerra, who is now a famous and highly trusted informant in Italy on the secrets of international fascism, explained that Guérin-Sérac, the founder and head of the Aginter Press, the organisation so closely associated with the Armée Secrète, was also a great supporter of Israel, because Israel and Aginter were allies in the same war —the one against communism. 247 The testimonies of Vinciguerra and Enrico de Boccard explain how it was possible that Otto Skorzeny, a Nazi, became a CIA and Mossad agent and was also used in the efforts to overthrow Castro. 248 With all this in mind, it is certainly worth exploring the history of the OAS further. We will discover additional elements that are useful in clarifying what really happened to John Kennedy on November 22, 1963 and why.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,008

In fact, Soustelle had founded an organisation in 1960 that he called the Comité d'Action de Défense Démocratique (Democratic Defence Action Committee). At the time, leading members of the right-wing Israeli establishment belonged to this organisation. At his trial for treason after leading the failed coup d'état in Algiers in April 1961 to force Charles de Gaulle not to abandon French Algeria, General Zeller fuelled allegations of Israeli involvement in Algeria by testifying that he did indeed expect support from that country. 252 And in 1961 and 1962 there were a whole series of newspaper reports in which it was openly claimed that Jacques Soustelle had received help from Ben-Gurion. 253

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,027

As we know, thanks to his friend John Galbraith, John Kennedy met with two important representatives of the National Liberation Front at the same time. They were Abdelkader Chanderli and Mohammed Yazid. But something else happened during this time. As Israeli historian Avner Cohen reports, Shimon Peres approached the French Ministry of Defence in 1956 to express Israel's interest in purchasing a nuclear reactor from France as part of a closer French-Israeli nuclear relationship. At the time, the French nuclear industry was indeed interested in finding a major international customer. But the French were hesitant. In the spring, Shimon Peres came to the conclusion that this hesitation could be overcome if he offered the French something very valuable in return: intelligence cooperation on relations between Egypt and the Algerian rebels. As a result, Ben-Gurion authorised the establishment of a special intelligence relationship between Israel and France in return for French assistance in the nuclear field. 256

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,073

As you will recall, the 35th President of the United States removed Walters because the latter invoked the need for a US military occupation of Italy in the event of a socialist government. The Central Intelligence Agency, through Walters, had signed a top-secret agreement with SIFAR, an Italian spy agency, against JFK. In light of this, Walters' ouster could, of course, cause this secret pact with SIFAR to collapse. However, Vernon Walters resolved the impasse by secretly entrusting Thomas Karamessines, then head of the CIA station in Rome, with the task of keeping this illegal pact alive. The similarity between Walter's betrayal and that of Soustelle becomes clear when one reads another part of the earlier mentioned book by Bar-Zohar on Shimon Peres. The Israeli historian explains that de Gaulle was kept in the dark about the fact that Jacques Soustelle, who had recently been appointed Minister for Atomic Energy, deliberately ignored his decision to end the nuclear partnership with Israel and instead even intensified this cooperation. Soustelle slimily instructed the heads of the Atomic Energy Commission to report only to him about Israel. He also instructed his assistants to meet secretly with Israeli scientists and answer their questions about the development of the French atomic bomb, which was to be finalised in the first months of 1960. So, as long as Jacques Soustelle was Minister of Energy, Charles de Gaulle could be deceived and the Dimona project was not interrupted.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,107

It is obvious that Charles de Gaulle's decision to end nuclear cooperation with Israel drove Ben-Gurion and Shimon Peres even more into the warm arms of Jacques Soustelle, who was more determined than ever to continue his pro-Israeli blind crusade after his resignation from the post of atomic energy minister. But this also means that the election of de Gaulle drove both Ben-Gurion and Shimon Peres even more into other warm arms, namely those of the Centro Mondiale Commerciale, and we will see in a moment what this assertion is based on.

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,251

In other words, the assassination of Mattei was really just another attempt to attack John Kennedy's international peace efforts. But there is more: Aldo Moro was the implicit target of an astonishing secret oath prepared by none other than Edgardo Sogno, a close associate of CMC member Pièche. As Sogno himself candidly admitted towards the end of his life, this oath was committed by the accomplices of his aforementioned subversive project as a consequence of Moro's decision to collaborate with JFK to integrate the Italian Socialist Party into the Italian government. Here is its content: 273

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,261

It goes without saying that we are faced with indisputable proof that Sogno's goal was the same one that Crocco, a CMC member, pursues every day. And that was to stop Aldo Moro and John Kennedy's Italian centre-left party at any cost, including murder. We know Crocco was fixated on this, thanks to the aforementioned letter from Italian spymaster Renzo Rocca. But as we have shown, behind Rocca's letter was the CIA's top operative in Rome, William Harvey, an ultra-hater of JFK. This is the same Harvey that another CIA agent, E. Howard Hunt, identified in his deathbed confession as being involved in the plot to assassinate JFK. Another element we should pay attention to is at the very end of the notes Zullino gave to Vincenzo Calia. In this part, Zullino accuses Cefis of being an agent of the CIA. What we can add to this information is that Cefis was also a secret ally of Israel. More precisely, in the summer of 1961, a German oil report suggested that there were economic links between ENI and Israel. This news sparked protests in the Arab world and prompted some countries in the Arab League Committee for the Boycott of Israel to demand explanations from Enrico Mattei. The president of ENI responded quickly with a letter dated 12 October 1961 to the ambassador to Rome of the United Arab Republic, which united Egypt and Syria from 1958 to 1961. Mattei assured that ENI had no relations with Israel and did not intend to establish any. Although his denial was sincere, the German report was right. The explanation is that his closest associate Cefis had abused his trust by secretly promoting relations with Israel through ANIC, an ENI subsidiary controlled by Cefis, without Mattei's knowledge. Later, however, following an internal investigation, a document emerged revealing Cefis' betrayal of Mattei. It was written in December 1961 and listed the shareholders of ANIC. Many of them were in fact Israeli citizens and some of them were even labelled "ns. agente", which means "our agent". 274

Note:

Yellow highlight | Location: 3,371

We should be aware that the NATO base in Naples was the headquarters of one of the Italian CIA Masonic lodges that led Freemasonry in that country because of one of the hidden clauses in the pact signed against John Kennedy in 1960. And it is worth noting that, as Colonel Fletcher Prouty revealed, the same NATO base in Naples also houses a hospital where secret mental manipulation operations are carried out. 278 We must also bear in mind that Naples became the headquarters of NATO Allied Command Europe in 1954. From 1951 to 2003, the Allied Command Europe was part of the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE). At the head of SHAPE is the Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR), who, as we know, since January 1963, has been none other than General Lemnitzer, John Kennedy's archenemy. This means that the NATO base in Naples was under Lemnitzer's control during JFK's presidency. Lemnitzer was the signatory to a paper urging NATO's Stay Behind network to stand ready for unorthodox war operations on September 10, 1963, shortly before the Dallas ambush. And a key element of the NATO Stay Behind network in Italy was a CMC member, Giuseppe Pièche. But as the Italian parliamentary committee of enquiry into P2 uncovered, the Supreme Allied Command headquarters in Europe was part of a NATO Freemasonic network, the American Military Scottish Rites (AMSRB), and this network was involved in Gigliotti and Pièche's secret plot against JFK. Finally, from 1962 to 1964, Giuseppe Pighini was an Italian member of the Supreme Headquarters of the Allied Powers Europe. Pighini was a soldier whose deep connections to the CMC and to Edgardo Sogno, the main accomplice of Giusepp Pièche's Italian Stay Behind branch, we have already examined in detail in the first part of this book. Yes, for the umpteenth time, everything is connected. All in all, this story of a poor young girl murdered for her involvement in murky NATO-related operations reminds us once again of the wisdom contained in the words of Joseph Kennedy, the father of JFK, and in the very similar remarks of the US ambassador to Italy, Richard Gardner, about the utter absurdity and extreme danger of fighting communism by stubbornly resorting to corruption and dirty dark manoeuvres. However, the violent death of Christa Wanninger also shows in retrospect how brilliant and clever John Kennedy's policy was. His decision to choose Mattei as a hedge for Moro's centre-left coalition was not only an excellent way to get rid of this insane corruption, but also a masterpiece of political acumen for the following three reasons. Firstly, if the oil supplier for NATO's naval forces in southern Europe had been Enrico Mattei's ENI instead of Monti and Spadafora's Mediterranea, this revolution would have concretely and firmly committed the Italian Socialist Party to a pro-NATO position, as it would have become part of the cabinet supported by John Kennedy, Moro and Mattei. This situation would have led to a split...

Note:
